Hanna cells are able to accumulate cadmium, zinc and iron from a complex metal mixture. Experiments were carried out to investigate how metal(loid) transport and assimilation processes are affected by high metal concentrations and a strong chelator (EDTA). As no cadmium, zinc or iron accumulations were observed at 1 mM EDTA, the accumulation rate was studied at 4 and 17 mM EDTA. Analysis of metal(loid) release and uptake revealed that EDTA strongly stimulates metal ion release from the cell envelopes in the first 20 h. This release starts to slow down and eventually becomes negligible at 17 mM EDTA. Only at the highest EDTA concentration, metal(loid) uptake rates started to increase. Increased metal(loid) concentrations in the medium tended to decrease metal(loid) uptake rates. The role of the chelator in metal(loid) transport is discussed. f678ea9f9e
